

Conference on Chinese Capitalism
Cornell University, April 20-21, 2007

Participant Biosketches

Yanjie Bian is Professor of Sociology at the University of Minnesota and Chair Professor of Social Science and Director of Survey Research Center at Hong Kong University of Science and Technology. His research areas are social stratification and mobility, social networks, economic sociology, and contemporary China. Since 2003, he has led the Chinese General Social Survey, a long-term, national sample survey of urban and rural China.

Chen Jian is Michael J. Zak Professor of History for US-China Relations and Director of China and Asia-Pacific Studies Program at Cornell University. A scholar in the field of Chinese international history, history of Chinese-American relations, and the international history of the Cold War, he is the author of China's Road to the Korean War: The Making of the Chinese-American Confrontation (1994), Chinese Communist Foreign Policy and the Cold War in Asia (1996, co-editor), China's Challenge of 21st-Century: Implications for US Foreign Policy (1998), and Mao's China and the Cold War (2001).

Tian Chuanhao graduated from Management School of Zhejiang University with a PH.D., and currently works in the College of Public Administration at Zhejiang University. His field is land tenure and land market in the transitional country.

Sherman Cochran is Huh Shih Professor of Chinese History at Cornell University. His research has been on Chinese business history, and his most recent book is Chinese Medicine Men: Consumer Culture in China and Southeast Asia (Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 2006).

Zhiyuan Cui is a professor in the School of Public Policy and Management at Tsinghua University, Fellow of the Institute for Advanced Study in Berlin, and Senior Visiting Fellow of Harvard Law School and is currently a Visiting Professor of Law at Cornell Law School. He received a Ph.D. and M.A. degrees at the University of Chicago (Political Science).

Doug Guthrie is Professor of Management and Organizations at New York University's Stern School of Business. He also holds an appointment as Professor of Sociology on NYU's Faculty of Arts and Sciences. His areas of expertise lie in the fields of management, corporate governance, and economic reform in China. He is author of Dragon in a Three-Piece Suit: The Emergence of Capitalism in China (Princeton University Press 1999) and China and Globalization: The Social, Economic, and Political Transformation of Chinese Society (Routledge 2006). He received his BA in Chinese Literature from the University of Chicago and PhD in Sociology from the University of California, Berkeley.

Mark Jacobs is a Ph.D. candidate in Economic Sociology at Cornell University, currently in the midst of writing his dissertation. The focus of his research relates to the transition of China from a planned economy to a market one, and, as a Fulbright Scholar, he has done extensive fieldwork in several different Chinese provinces investigating this topic. His particular interest is in the role of Zhejiang Province as the leading force for China's private economy.

Jeong-han Kang is a postdoctoral associate at Center for the Study of Economy and Society (jhk55@cornell.edu). His current research centers on China's economic transformation and entrepreneurship. One of his recent publications includes "Competitive Crowding and Risk Taking in a Tournament," Administrative Science Quarterly (with Matthew S. Bothner and Toby E. Stuart, forthcoming). He received Ph.D. in sociology at University of Chicago and specializes in organizations, economic sociology, and methodology.

Peter J. Katzenstein is the Walter S. Carpenter, Jr. Professor of International Studies at Cornell University. His research and teaching lie at the intersection of the fields of international relations and comparative politics. Katzenstein's work addresses issues of political economy, security and culture in both Europe and Asia, with specific focus on Germany and Japan. His current research interests focus on the role of anti-Americanism, religion and popular culture, and regionalism in world politics, as well as changes in German politics.

Hanlong Lu is Professor of Sociology and Dean of the Faculty of Social Development Studies and Director of the Institute of Sociology at Shanghai Academy of Social Sciences and Vice Chairman of the Society of Sociology in China. His areas of specialization include social stratification, income unequal and occupation, social indicators and quality of life, and consumer culture in China. He is the author or editor of more than ten books, most recently the Economic Institute Reform and Social Transformation, Equilibrium and Stability: New Value for Development. He was visiting scholar in the Institute of Social Development at UK and universities at US including Cornell University.

Debin Ma was Leverhulme Trust Visiting Fellow at The London School of Economics and Political Science from 2005-06 and became a faculty member in the Department of Economic History of the School in 2006. He earned his doctoral degree at Department of Economics at University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill has been doing research and publishing extensively on economic history, comparative economic systems, and international economics. His works appeared in major journals like The Journal of Economic History, Economic Development and Cultural Change, Australian Economic History Review, Journal of the Asia Pacific Economy, Explorations in Economic History, etc.

Victor Nee is Goldwin Smith Professor of Sociology at Cornell University. His areas of expertise include economic sociology; theory; market transitions from state socialism; comparative institutional analysis; immigration and ethnic/racial inequality. His current research focuses on advancing new institutional economic sociology through empirical studies that include: a sociological study of entrepreneurs in new market economies, the effects of immigration on race relations in the American workplace, and the interactions between institutional environments and organizational form and performance in the global economy.

Sonja Opper is Gad Rausing Professor of International Economics at Lund University (Sweden). She holds a Ph.D. in Economics (Tubingen University, Germany). Her research interests are in institutional economics, comparative economic systems and transformation of economic systems.

William L. Parish, Professor and Chair of the Sociology Department at the University of Chicago, is author or editor of five books on Chinese society. Recently, he conducted a national survey of sexual behavior in China, which produced articles in outlets such as the Journal of the American Medical Association. He also has a continuing interest in business relations in China, including a recent article on charitable donations by private entrepreneurs.

Qian Yanmin is a professor in the College of Economics and a researcher with the Center for Research in Private Enterprise (CRPE) at Zhejiang University. His research focuses on agricultural finance, regional development and development economics.

Professor Shi Jinchuan, Ph.D. Economics, is Director of the The Center for Research of Economics (CRPE) and Head of the School of Economics at Zhejiang University. He is currently a detecting expert for research proposal evaluations at the National Foundation for Social Science in applied economics, critical detecting expert for mailing evaluation of research proposals of the National Foundation of Nature Science in the Management Science section. Professor Shi's main research fields are focused on macro-economic theories and policy, regional economic development strategy, and law and economics theories.

Richard Swedberg is Professor of Sociology at Cornell University. His major works are on economic sociology and classical theorists, such as Joseph Schumpeter, Max Weber and Alexis de Tocqueville. Together with Neil Smelser, he is the co-editor of "Handbook of Economic Sociology".

Zun Tang is a Ph.D. candidate in the Sociology Department at Cornell. His main research interests include social networks and labor markets, institutional change and organization behavior, and entrepreneurship. His dissertation focuses on the role of social networks in Chinas labor market, trying to understand what social networks provide for employers and job seekers and what social networks do not provide in the job search and hiring process.

Dr. Wang Zhikai is Associate Professor in the Department of Economics at Zhejiang University and Research Fellow of the Center for Study in Labour Economics and Public Policy. Dr. Wang's main research fields are urban and regional economics, social security policy and welfare economy, public policy and public administration.

Henry Wan is Professor of Economics at Cornell University. He earned his Ph.D. at MIT. His areas of expertise include international trade and finance, economic development and planning, game theory. Current research is on the foundations of endogenous growth; direct foreign investment as a catalyst for technology transfer; a panel test of the convergence hypothesis; the effects of international borrowing.

Professor Wang Wei, Ph.D. in Economics is an authorized academic supervisor of Ph.D. candidates, general secretary of the CRPE (the Center For Research of Private Economy) at Zhejiang University, Vice-director of Stocks and Derivatives Research Center, and the general secretary of Zhejiang Provincial Securities and Public Company Institute. Professor Wang specializes in the fields of Financial Economics, Capital Market and Company Financial Theory, Private Economics and Regional Economics Theory.

David Wippman is Vice Provost for International Relations and Professor of Law at Cornell University. Prof. Wippman is an accomplished authority in international law, human rights, and ethnic conflict. Prof. Wippman took a year away from Cornell Law School's faculty to serve the Clinton Administration as Director of the National Security Council's Office of Multilateral and Humanitarian Affairs from 1998-99. During his tenure at the White House, Prof. Wippman assisted in the formulation of U.S. policy on war crimes, UN political issues, and economic sanctions. After graduation from Yale Law School he clerked for Hon. Wilfred Feinberg, Chief Judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. He practiced in Washington, D.C. from 1983 until joining Cornell Law School's faculty in 1992. Prof. Wippman earned his M.A. from Yale University in 1978 and his J.D. at Yale School of Law in 1982.

Zhu Hui's (Zhejiang University, Economics) research areas include law and economics, international trade. In 2005, Zhu gave lectures about China Economy at Portland State University. As a university teacher, he teaches undergraduate economics, international trade, and business English. Publications include five books and eight articles.